examination thesis from the year 2014 in the subject english language and literature studies literature grade 1 0 university of paderborn language english abstract this thesis will start with some general assumptions on spatiality in literature and outline its importance for detective fiction the focus will be on the concepts of space and place by de certeau lefebvre and lotman afterwards in the subchapter on the geographical and physical context crucial dichotomies of space which have an influence on detective novels will be examined especially the distinction between open and enclosed spaces the chapter that follows will deal with three concrete novels of different eras to explore the representation of devon with regard to the specific dichotomy mentioned above arthur conan doyle s the hound of the baskervilles 1902 and agatha christie s novel the sitta ford mystery 1931 both depict devon in the early and middle twentieth century while simon beckett s the calling of the grave 2010 shows a contemporary idea of how this region is perceived a comparative analysis of these three novels will follow in order to point out the similarities and differences of devon spaces as well as to underline how they together create its overall image in this way this chapter shows that new inventions have only changed this location and its perception at the surface but not in its core since there are many adaptations of doyle s novel the fourth chapter will take a closer look at two medial representations of devon and compare the literary with the medial space the popular film adaptation by lanfield from 1939 and an episode of the bbc series sherlock a reimagining contemporary update of doyle s classic will serve as examples although many aspects of the adaptations could be compared to the novel the interest will primarily be in the cinematographic realisation of spaces furthermore the question of how far these spaces coincide with the image of devon created by literature will be discussed subsequently the conclusion will finally summarise the findings of this thesis and suggest possibilities to expand the topic of british detective fiction and devon spaces bachelor thesis from the year 2014 in the subject english language and literature studies literature grade 2 1 university of bonn institut für anglistik amerikanistik und keltologie language english abstract this paper foremost deals with the question in which ways the magic detective peter grant is differentiated from the non magic detective that is to say sherlock holmes and in which ways the world of the protagonist is modified by the supernatural representatives for the two different approaches will be a scandal in bohemia first published in 1891 as well as a study in scarlet first published in 1887 by arthur conan doyle and ben aaronovitch s rivers of london even though there are many iconic detectives that could have served the purpose sherlock holmes was chosen as he is something like a patron saint of detective fiction priestman states on that matter that sir arthur conan doyle s sherlock holmes is the supreme character of nineteenth century detective fiction detective fiction 74 a scandal in bohemia was chosen here as it features a female culprit and it will be interesting to set the female role as presented in the short story against the one in the more recent novel by aaronovitch however when referring to sherlock holmes a study in scarlet will also be accounted for as this is the story where watson first meets the legendary sleuth and thus the reader is described a lot of mannerisms of his through the eyes of the narrator peter grant s story was selected as there is barely another novel at the time which features the supernatural next to the criminal in such a striking pattern this assumption was made due to the fact that peter grant is a wizard and a police constable at the same time therefore it will be interesting to explore how this fact influences him and the world he lives in and also the distinction between the victorian and the postmodern approach
