it has often been argued that the concept of human rights is an artefact of modern western civilisation that human rights in the south are privileges conferred these approaches have taken little cognisance of the place accorded to the societal rights held in such esteem as complementary to individual rights in traditional african society in contrast this study argues that human rights in africa are as much about the dignity of africans as about the commitments of others towards them it argues for a critical defence of universal human rights within a multicultural framework from historical perspectives it illustrates how the slave trade and then colonialism undermined the traditional balance of individual and societal rights tracing the trajectory of postcolonial politics makau mutua maps the political forces that have shaped contemporary kenya he also critically explores efforts on the part of both civil society and the political opposition to reform the state analyzing the tortuous efforts since independence to create a sustainable democratic state he uses the struggle over constitutional reform as a window for understanding the larger struggles confronting kenyan society
